

HUGHES CHEERED BY THOUSANDS IN INDIANA CAPITAL

Great Torchlight Parade Precedes Meeting in Auditorium.

FAIRBANKS JOINS LEADER OF TICKET

Pair Meet for First Time Since They Were Nominated.

(From a Staff Correspondent of the Tribune.) Indianapolis, Sept. 23.—Indianapolis dressed in her political best to-night to witness the most intensive campaigning days this state ever saw. Torchlight parades, the blare of a dozen bands, red fire and the enthusiasm of marching thousands greeted the Republican candidates, Charles E. Hughes and Charles W. Fairbanks, who met in public for the first time since their political fortunes intertwined at the Chicago convention.

Mr. and Mrs. Hughes, Mr. Fairbanks and his daughter, Mrs. John W. Timmons, were whisked from the train to the Marion Club in an automobile to start the parade on the cheering way as soon as the campaign special arrived. Meanwhile Tomlinson Hall waited with 6,000 packed in people to witness famous echoes of political oratory.

The Hughes creed, especially Americanism, Mexico and the tariff, took Indianapolis by storm. Mr. Hughes declared the Administration policy toward Russia meant intervention, meddling and no protection to American citizens. Democratic control, he said, was a menace to the country.

Despite his boariness yesterday and the hands outside the hall, his words reached every nook and cranny of it. As at South Bend, the Republican nominee merely greeted the open-air crowds.

Indiana Leaders Pleased.

Indiana leaders are immensely pleased with the way the tour has unfolded here. Frank H. Hitchcock, A. T. Hart, Western campaign manager; Will Hayes, the state chairman; Harry New, candidate for United States Senator; Jim Watson, the other Senatorial candidate, and others who accompanied to-night's invasion of the home of Senator Tom Taggart, Thomas R. Marshall, Senator Kern and other Democratic leaders, were quoting Republican stock at considerable above par when they saw how Indianapolis turned out to welcome Mr. Hughes.

Republican leaders have set their sights on winning this state and from indications they are going to win it. Here it is only a little beyond the middle of September and the campaign in Indiana has reached a pitch that would make November 6.

Six Meetings in a Day.

Mr. Hughes made the best of his six air meetings to-day. His insistence last night that he address South Bend's turnout weakened his voice somewhat, but there was no stopping him to-day any more than yesterday. Those who have been with him this week realize that he needs the Sunday rest. He has talked to nearly 200,000 people in this state in three days, delivered telling speeches to them when the schedule only called for a five-minute talk from the rear platform.

He was up early to respond to La Porte's welcome. He started right out at Americanism. "We have got to have in this country," he said, "the driving power of patriotic sentiment. You cannot expect progress in a country if the people are decadent; if they are disposed not to recognize nor to enforce their just rights. That means a loss of self-respect, a loss of patriotic energy; that means decadence and disaster. That is not the path of war. That is the path of peace."

Speaking to a crowd of nearly 10,000

workingmen at Michigan City, he had this to say:

"America cannot provide work. America can never be successful and prosper if we do not have a splendid patriotic sentiment. We are all Americans, whatever race, whatever creed, wherever we come from, whether foreign born or born here. American means your attitude toward things, not where you were born or what is your race. It is a word of the spirit, it is not a word of the flesh."

"Our friends must think this election is going to be decided by men who do not know anything, who never read anything, who have no memories, to suppose that they would be deluded by a prosperity of a temporary character created by the European war," he said.

Mr. Hughes's physician would not let him say but a few words toward the end of the day, but at Valparaiso, one of the last few stops, Mr. Hughes pressed his whole platform in one sentence that won him remarkable applause. This was the sentence:

"I simply say that I am here for the purpose of serving, if the American people desire it, the interests of the United States in maintaining protection of American agriculture and American industry, in safeguarding of American rights throughout the world and in maintenance of the honor of the American flag."

THREE MORE SPEECHES ARRANGED FOR WILSON

Omaha and Indianapolis to Hear President Next Month.

Three more speeches in which President Wilson has set himself the delicate task of discussing issues of the present campaign while remaining strictly "non-partisan" were announced at National Democratic headquarters here yesterday. Vance McCormick, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, took pains to explain that the President would not answer any of the attacks upon his Administration in any of his talks.

The first of the new engagements is at Omaha, Neb., on October 5, where President Wilson will speak at a big meeting of the semi-centennial celebration of Nebraska's admission to the union.

On October 12 another speech will be delivered at the Good Roads Convention at Indianapolis.

The third engagement is scheduled for October 14, when President Wilson will be thrown open to a delegation of Pennsylvanians. The date has been set aside as "Pennsylvania Day."

It was said yesterday arrangements are under way for setting aside a date for New York at Shadow Lawn. Neither the time nor the details of the plan have been agreed upon as yet.

Democratic leaders claim credit for "smoking out" reluctant Republican college men in announcing that the Hughes College Men's League has accepted their challenge to participate in a series of joint debates on the issues of the present campaign. "Big Bill" Edwards, Princeton graduate and secretary of the National Woodrow Wilson College Men's League, appointed a committee of five speakers to meet with the Hughes men and arrange terms and conditions of the debates.

U. S. TO STUDY MACHINE GUNS

Baker Announces Board Will Test Weapon for Use in Army Here.

Washington, Sept. 23.—Secretary Baker announced to-day that a board would be appointed to study types of machine guns best suited for United States army use. The board will conduct experiments and tests and make recommendations to the War Department.

The board will investigate the merits of the Lewis gun, invented by Colonel Isaac Lewis, retired, U. S. A., once offered to the War Department, but rejected and then accepted by Great Britain, and in use in the present war.

Patrolman Edward F. Rohan, of 349 East 103d Street, The Bronx, and Alois Hannak, whose home is believed to have been in San Francisco, were killed early yesterday morning, when an automobile in which they were passengers careened from a telegraph pole into a tree on the New Rochelle Road near Pelham Bay Bridge.

AUTO WRECK KILLS TWO; ONE A POLICEMAN

Machine Hits Telegraph Pole and Tree—Driver Held.

Irving Farian, of 249 West 107th Street, owner of the car, was held in $5,000 bail on a charge of homicide. He said he was crowded to the side of the road by another automobile.

Several in the motoring party had been schoolmates. One of them was not found after the accident. The other two were Thomas Murray, of 205 West 103d Street, and Dennis Manning, of 143 West Ninety-fifth Street.
